

Investigating Psychology

Key concepts, key studies, key approaches

978-0-19-965176-4 26 January 2012

Edited by Nicola Brace, Senior Lecturer in Psychology, The Open University, and Jovan Byford, Lecturer in Psychology, The Open University

Nicola Brace is a Senior Lecturer in Psychology and has worked at The Open University since 1999. Before then she was a member of the Psychology department at the University of Westminster for 14 years.

Jovan Byford is a Lecturer in Psychology and has worked at The Open University since 2006. Before that he taught psychology at Nottingham Trent University.

Contributors:

Dr Jean McAvoy, The Open University

Dr Phil Banyard, Nottingham Trent University

Dr John Oates, The Open University

Professor Frederick Toates, The Open University

Dr Deborah Custance, Goldsmith's College, University of London

Dr Charlotte Brownlow, The University of Southern Queensland

Dr Graham Edgar, University of Gloucestershire

Dr Helen Edgar, Chartered Psychologist

Professor Graham Pike, The Open University

Dr Nicola Brace, The Open University

Why do people do harm to others?

1: Jean McAvoy: Exposing the authoritarian personality

2: Phil Banyard: Just following orders?

3: John Oates: Learning from watching

How do others influence who we are and what we do?

4: Frederick Toates: Changing behaviour

5: Deborah Custance: Determined to love?

6: Charlotte Brownlow: Making friends

How do we investigate psychological processes that we cannot directly observe, like attention, memory or language?

7: Frederick Toates: Language and the brain

8: Helen Edgar and Graham Edgar: Paying attention

9: Graham Pike and Nicola Brace: Witnessing and remembering